

Euro Class A-H

Summary

- Many financial markets rose in April, in local terms, recovering from earlier falls. A weaker US dollar weighed on the convertibles market.
- The earnings season had a major effect on performance, with companies that beat analysts' forecasts being rewarded with higher prices for their shares and convertibles, while those that fell short slipped back.
- Convertibles from Elekta, Euronet Worldwide and Ubisoft left the portfolio, while others from Blackhawk, Steinhoff and Zhejiang Expressway joined.

Where a security has not been rated by Standard & Poor's, Fitch or Moody's, we may use M&G's internal credit rating. Based on a comparison of all available ratings for each security, the most conservative rating (S&P, Fitch, Moody's or M&G's internal rating) is taken into consideration. The ratings so identified are then expressed or converted into M&G's ratings format to obtain uniform information for all securities in the portfolio.

Performance review

On the whole, financial markets rose in April, in local terms at least, with most equity markets rallying and bond markets also positive, although investors had plenty of news to contend with. Early in the month, increasing geopolitical tension weighed on sentiment as US President Donald Trump launched air strikes against Syria and ratcheted up aggressive rhetoric with North Korea. However, these fears appeared to fade following a win for Emmanuel Macron in the first round of the French elections and some robust US corporate earnings. The strength of sterling, following the surprise announcement of a UK election to be held in June, and of the euro, led to lower returns from overseas assets to investors based in those currencies. The relative weakness of the US dollar weighed on convertible returns, since the majority of the universe is denominated in the currency. The fund's performance was slightly behind that of its benchmark, with hedged share classes doing better than unhedged.

The earnings season had a major effect on the convertibles market, with companies that beat analysts' forecasts being rewarded with higher prices for their shares and convertibles, while those that fell short slipped back. Among the businesses whose results pleased investors, to the benefit of the fund, were glass packaging manufacturer Owens-Illinois and internet firm Yahoo in the US, as well as German pharmaceutical company Bayer. The fund contains a stake in the equity of Owens-Illinois, a call option and a convertible from Yahoo and a mandatory convertible into Bayer. On the other hand, the convertible from US cloud-computing group Citrix Systems, which has been a very strong performer recently, declined when guidance for the current quarter was seen as disappointing. The convertibles from two other US technology groups, Electronics for Imaging and ON Semiconductor, also detracted from performance.

Away from company earnings, the equity and convertible from Italian asset manager Azimut moved higher when the group announced that it would tender for the convertible at a price above the market value. This process will enable Azimut to optimise its capital structure and save on interest payments while avoiding potential shareholder dilution.

In a reversal of last month's price activity, the fund's performance relative to the Thomson Reuters Global Focus Convertibles Index was boosted by having no exposure to two convertibles in the US oil & gas sector, Weatherford International and Cheasapeake Energy, both of which fell during the month. On the other hand, not owning convertibles from electric car manufacturer Tesla was detrimental. None of these bonds satisfied Fund Manager Léonard Vinville's rigorous selection criteria.

Key changes

Léonard has been making a conscious effort to reduce exposure to higher equity sensitivity convertibles trading a long way above their bond floors, which he believes offer little further upside. This included convertibles from electronic payment facilitator Euronet Worldwide and online travel services group Priceline in the US, and video games publisher Ubisoft Entertainment from France. Euronet and Ubisoft were sold completely, with Ubisoft having become very expensive as it reflected the possibility of a takeover by French media giant Vivendi. Léonard also sold a small position in US data management group NICE Systems, which he had bought at issue. Although the company appears attractive in terms of credit, the equity seemed overvalued. A convertible from Swedish cancer therapy developer Elekta left the portfolio when it was redeemed.

At the same time, Léonard has been purchasing more balanced convertibles with greater potential upside. In April he added convertibles from Blackhawk Network, Steinhoff and Zhejiang Expressway. Blackhawk is a US financial company that provides a range of prepaid gift and debit cards, so operates in a similar area to Euronet Worldwide. However, in Léonard's opinion, the Blackhawk convertible is more technically attractive and offers greater potential upside. Léonard increased the fund's exposure to Steinhoff, an integrated South African retailer, by adding another convertible to complement the two bonds already held. Finally, the credit quality of Zhejiang, which manages toll roads in China, appears robust while its equity seems undervalued.
